It's All About Attitude: Perspective Taking

During the month of January, students are learning about perspective taking in character education. Perspective taking is the ability to see situations and events from the viewpoint of another person. As students learn to consider alternate points of view, they can more effectively overcome their own anxieties, exercise impulse control, and gauge their own behaviors and reactions in response to others. When differences of opinion are honored, and disagreement is respectful, students perceive the classroom as safe and risk-free. In the lessons on perspective taking, students are identifying different perspectives of characters in a story and learning to apply open-ended perspective taking skills to social situations in their own lives.
